MOLLY GIVEN, PHILADELPHIA FEATURES EDITOR

In the age of blockbuster comic-book superhero movies, it's not an easy feat to create a good vs. evil story unlike anyone has ever seen. M. Night Shyamalan has managed to do just that with the final chapter of his trilogy, "Glass." The film brings back Bruce Willis' David Dunn and Samuel L. Jackson's Elijah Price from "Unbreakable," and James McAvoy's Kevin Wendell Crumb from "Split." Metro sat down with Shyamalan and Jackson to discuss the film, how the characters have evolved over time, and what they think of the superhero movement.

For more, see pages 4-5.

PHA
PHILADELPHIA HOUSING AUTHORITY
OPENING DOORS TO OPPORTUNITIES

The Philadelphia Asset & Property Management Corporation, a private service affiliate of the Philadelphia Housing Authority, is accepting applications for new affordable townhome rental apartments at the North Central Phases II and III developments. The new housing is centrally located in the vibrant North Central neighborhood of Philadelphia, with excellent access to public transportation, shopping and other neighborhood services. Amenities include central air conditioning and in-unit washer and dryer. All buildings are smoke free.

The housing is funded in part by a Choice Neighborhoods grant from the US Department of Housing and Urban, and with financing obtained through the federal Section 42 Low Income Housing Tax Credit (LIHTC) program. Under the LIHTC program, occupancy is restricted to households with incomes at or less than 60% of Area Median Income (AMI) based on household size. Income-qualified applicants will be required to meet additional eligibility criteria. This chart shows the current maximum household income by household size:

Household Size	1 Person	2 Persons	3 Persons	4 Persons	5 Persons	6 Persons	7 Persons	8 Persons
Maximum Income	$36,720	$42,000	$47,220	$52,440	$56,640	$60,840	$65,040	$69,240

Two and three-bedroom apartments are available for March 2019 occupancy. Other bedroom sizes will be available later in 2019. The current rents are show on the following chart. An allowance for resident-paid utilities will be deducted from the listed rents.

Bedroom Size	1BR	2BR	3BR	4BR	5BR
Rent	$984	$1,180	$1,363	$1,521	$1,678

Applications may be submitted in person at the Norris Community Center located to 1915 N. 11th Street on January 23, 2019 from 10 AM to 7 PM

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

The actor talks returning for "Glass" and more.

DMITRY BELYAEV, MWN
letters@metro.us

Metro caught up with actor and film producer Samuel L. Jackson, who plays Elijah Price in the 2019 American superhero thriller film "Glass" — the final installment of M. Night Shyamalan's hit trilogy, following "Unbreakable" (2000) and "Split" (2016).

You were pushing for a trilogy since "Unbreakable" was released in 2000. Are you happy that it's finally complete?
I'm glad I had closure. It felt like an open-ended story. It felt like everything has been said and done that needed to be said and done. And it was great to go back to it, allow these characters to breathe and have this completion.

Comics were a niche back then. And now we are oversaturated with comic-book films and TV series.
You think that? Is it oversaturation or they are just catching up?

Well, if they are catching up, is it a good thing?
Sure. There've always been adventure stories. When I was a kid there were westerns, pirate and monster movies. Now there are more platforms, more people, more devices to see things on. Kids now play video games that are… like movies, right? So, movies have to compete with that. There are many different things to keep up with.

Are you a comic-book fan yourself?
Yes. But I don't specifically read superhero comic books. I read graphic novels, like "Southern Bastards" and "Scalped." I love manga.

Are comics an important part of culture now, in your opinion?
Not necessarily. It's always been a form of escapism. It is entry-level reading, in a certain way. For example, when I was a kid, my mama had a rule that for every five comic books I read, I had to read a classic. In comics you have visual along with your literature. It makes your mind active.

Back to the film. Your character has changed a lot since "Unbreakable." Most of the movie, Mr. Glass barely speaks.
You always have to be present while you are not speaking. When you want people to know you are in a room, want them to feel you when you are not speaking, you have to find a way to be actively quiet. It is one of the early lessons you learn in acting school. The body language has to say a lot of different things. It has to say, "I'm part of this." Especially for Elijah, because we know that he is sharp and is constantly trying to stay one step ahead of people.

Have you ever met a real-life superhero?
That depends. You know, I think there are people, like Nelson Mandela, who under extraordinary circumstances developed an extraordinary idea of life that was able to affect a great amount of people through experiences and history.

What about super-villains?
We got one on the way out.

What are your superpowers?
I hope my superpower is making people laugh, and [are] entertained, and making sure their money is worth it when they see a movie.

"Glass" is now in theaters.

'I did not think that I would ever finish the trilogy' M. Night Shyamalan

Nineteen years since "Unbreakable" was filmed, Indian-born American filmmaker Manoj Nelliyattu "M. Night" Shyamalan, has finally completed the trilogy, wrapping up with superhero thriller "Glass," which hits theaters this weekend. Metro talked with the 48-year-old about the new movie. DMITRY BELYAEV

JESSICA KOURKOUNIS | UNIVERSAL PICTURES

How was it to work again with Bruce Willis, Samuel L. Jackson and everyone?
It was very unusual for me. I've never done anything like that – when actors play the same roles again. When they started talking with their character's voices – it was a shock in a powerful way. When James started talking as Patricia, we were all: "She is back! Patricia is back." It was very fun and exciting.

So you witnessed how they evolved as actors and as people?
Yes. For Bruce, I wanted to bring out his fatherly tones. I've worked with him for 19 years and I only know him as father of all his five girls, and I wanted to bring that out. As for James [McAvoy], I just worked with him and we did not stop for too long. We really get along. And Sam changed a bit for me. He was prepped more, he thought about things, had ideas – like a theatre guy. He actually became a better actor.

It took you so long to complete the trilogy. Why is that?
The honest answer is that "Unbreakable" was not received particularly well. And I think I was hurt for a long time. It felt that there will be no interest in this weird subject of comic books. I did not think that I would ever finish the trilogy. I knew the second one – "Split," and I knew what I kind of wanted to do in the third. But it just did not feel as a subject people are interested in. But every year it grew and grew.

And then the comic books boom happened?
Not even that, but people started loving "Unbreakable." And I was like: "Why is everyone talking about it now? What happened when it came out?" I went to make smaller movies, and I made "The Visit" which became a big turning point for me. I had such a good time making that movie that I was like "Let's make another one. I had idea of 'Split.'"

But now there are so many comic books films and TV series. Is that good or bad, in your opinion?
It is complicated. I am primarily a filmmaker, so I make films for movie theaters in a roughly two-hour format. That is what my art form is. And sequel, by its nature, is telling a longer-form story that traditionally keeps it open-ended to keep going and going. Which is a serialized TV. So, I enjoy them like everybody else. But I want to make sure we still keep our original art form alive.

Did the change in perception of comics help you to complete the trilogy?
Well, I did not have to fight anybody anymore about making the movie about comic books. That's for sure, everybody got it. In terms of content, no. I tried to make Dunn slightly different that what you expected.

You deconstruct the superhero genre by making them more human.
Well, I love that. I love them being more human about everything. That's the most interesting part: making them super grounded.

What about that "true marvel" line? Did you try to challenge Marvel with "Glass"?
No, it was just a wink towards those guys saying "that's where marvel would happen."

Brauhaus Schmitz
Prost! If you're a fan of German fare and lots of beer Brauhaus Schmitz is the place to go. With a fun, upbeat Biergarten atmosphere, it is almost impossible not to have a good time. Their drink list is vast and extensive with 30 German beers on draft and over 50 in bottle. You may come for the drinks, but you will stay for the food. Brauhaus Schmitz's menu boasts house-made sausages, Schnitzel and their award-winning Schweinshaxe. Other authentically delicious menu items include kartoffelsalat, spätzle, apfelmus, haseenpfeffer and much more. This little slice of German heaven on South Street is a must, especially if you are looking for an unforgettable time. 718 South St., brauhausschmitz.com

Barra Rossa
Barra Rossa knows how to bring the atmosphere of Italy right to the City of Brotherly Love. As soon as you walk in you see a sleek, stylish and welcoming bar area. You're impressed already but then you realize there is an upstairs as well. The upstairs offers a gorgeous dining room with a huge bar providing plenty of space to sit back with friends and have a fantastic meal. Barra Rossa's delicious menu includes prosciutto di parma, taleggio, zuppa del minestrone, grilled salmon, raspberry chicken, eggplant parmesan and a mouth-watering selection of pizzas. Barra Rossa also offers a happy hour menu, plenty of drinks, wine and cocktail selections and a tasty lunch menu. A perfect spot if you are looking for the best places to eat in Philadelphia this weekend. 929 Walnut St., barrarossa.com

Oloroso
If you haven't had Spanish tapas before, you need to, and you need to try it from Oloroso. The hotspot embraces the culture of Europe even including a siesta that offers tapas selections served alongside your drink, a nod to the tradition of Ir de tapas. There is no better way to experience Oloroso than with friends, sharing in the indulgent meal selections with loved ones makes the whole dinner that much more special. Tempting menu items include marinated tuna, squid ink rice, paella verde, scallops con batata, wood oven pork belly and much more. Oloroso also offers a five-course tasting menu and a roasted half pig's head. 1121 Walnut St., olorosophilly.com

Ben Barnes plays Jigsaw in season 2. CARA HOWE/NETFLIX

Ben Barnes explains 'The Punisher' season 2's approach to Jigsaw

He isn't the iconic villain comic book fans may be expecting, but that's OK!

ANDREW HUSBAND

When a recent trailer for "The Punisher" season two finally revealed what the Netflix show's version of the iconic villain Jigsaw would look like, some longtime comic book readers weren't too keen on it. Sure, Billy Russo's (Ben Barnes) face was no longer the pristine, pretty visage it had once been before Frank Castle (Jon Bernthal) had smashed it into a broken mirror in season one, but it was nothing like the horrifying face fans were familiar with. As Barnes tells Metro, however, audiences shouldn't rush to condemn their take on Jigsaw just yet.

"I wanted it to be more gruesome at first," he says. "Have an eye pulled down, a lip curled up and all these stitches and scars. But they persuaded me differently by saying that he had had 12 hours of professional plastic surgery, during which they put him back to together. Mostly. Sure, there are cartoon versions of this that exist. There are the 'War Zone' comics and the movie based on them. They worked really well and we didn't want to make something like that, something that had already been made."

Of course, simply avoiding the same look as the comic books and previous iterations of the character wasn't the sole intent of Barnes, the writers and the makeup team. In fact, the "Westworld" actor traces this version's more psychologically-specific interpretation on conversations he'd had with showrunner Steve Lightfoot while shooting season one.

"The catalyst for it, I believe, was a conversation between myself and Steve when we were shooting the carousel fight at the end of season 1, when my face is being smashed against the mirror so many times, I remember thinking to myself, 'Wow, these brain injuries would be really bad. His brain would be rattling around in his skull a lot.' I thought, aside from the physical damage, it would also potentially cause major issues with the frontal lobe, especially personality and memory. It made me think of the movie 'Memento.'"

Barnes just so happened to be working with Jonathan Nolan, whose short story served as the inspiration for that film, on HBO's "Westworld." This spurred more conversations about what Frank's pummeling would do to Billy's brain.

"I thought, 'Wouldn't it be cool if he couldn't necessarily remember all the bad things he had done, or what had been done to him? What if he had become a kind of blank slate, albeit one infused with all this suffering, torment, history and intimacy that he couldn't quite place or explain?' I just found it all so fascinating, and it turned out that Steve did too. We figured that, instead of Billy becoming Jigsaw because of what Frank had done to his face, what if the puzzle was actually in his mind?"

"The Punisher" season two is now on Netflix.

Get ready for a weekend of TV that's equal parts controversial and not. For the former, audiences can tune to watch HBO's Brexit TV movie with Benedict Cumberbatch or Showtime's "SMILF" season two. For the latter, BBC America is premiering the first episode of "Dynasties," the cable network's latest David Attenborough-narrated nature miniseries. Here's what to watch on TV this weekend. "DYNASTIES"

Jan. 19 at 9 p.m. on BBC America
Aside from "Killing Eve" and "Doctor Who," BBC America has become well known for its nature documentary series. The majority of these have been narrated or produced by David Attenborough, and "Dynasties" is no different. The program follows five of the world's most celebrated but endangered animals, and its first episode is all about the lion of the African continent. Future episodes highlight the chimpanzee, tiger, painted wolf and emperor penguin.

"SMILF"

Jan. 20 at 10:30 p.m. on Showtime
Frankie Shaw's critically acclaimed "SMILF" was tarnished by controversy when The Hollywood Reporter revealed that sexual misconduct claims had been levied against the showrunner by another actress. Shaw has since apologized for the allegations and made clear that she is striving to do better. As for the show itself, "SMILF" follows single mom Bridgette Bird (Shaw) as she tries to make the best life possible for her 3-year-old son. Rosie O'Donnell co-stars as Bridgette's stubborn mother.

"BREXIT"

Benedict Cumberbatch plays Dominic Cummings in HBO's Brexit movie. HBO

Jan. 19 at 9 p.m. on HBO
When HBO dropped the first trailer for its Brexit TV movie in mid-December, proponents and opponents of the United Kingdom's titular referendum were both displeased. Which is understandable, because Britain is still reeling from the vote's consequences. In the film, Benedict Cumberbatch plays Dominic Cummings, the man who spearheaded the Vote Leave campaign and ultimately led to the country's disastrous decision to leave the European Union.

"CRASHING"

Jan. 20 at 10 p.m. on HBO
Stand-up comic Pete Holmes's semiautobiographical comedy "Crashing" returns for a third season on HBO. Pete returns to the New York comedy scene after a two-month college tour with a renewed sense of confidence. In true "Crashing" fashion, of course, it all comes tumbling down as Pete soon realizes that all the hard work he's put into rebuilding his career might not be enough. Jamie Lee, who writes for and produces the show, returns as Pete's fellow comedian and ex Ali Reissen.

"HIGH MAINTENANCE"

Jan. 20 at 10:30 p.m. on HBO
Viewers hoping for a more mellow bit of TV can look no further than the season 3 premiere of Katja Blichfeld and Ben Sinclair's "High Maintenance" on HBO. As with previous seasons, the show follows The Guy (Sinclair) as he tells various stories about the lives of New Yorkers who do (and do not) partake in marijuana use. The Guy's clients come from all walks of life, which makes "High Maintenance" one of the more fun and innovative anthology-esque shows on TV today.

"BLACK MONDAY"

Showtime's "Black Monday" premieres this weekend. SHOWTIME

Jan. 20 at 10 p.m. on Showtime
Showtime's latest "dramedy" is framed around the disastrous day of its title. On Oct. 19, 1987, Wall Street suffered the worst crash in its history. Created by David Caspe and Jordan Cahan, and with executive producers Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg directing the pilot episode, "Black Monday" follows the members of The Jammer Group as they cope with the market's losses. Don Cheadle, Regina Hall, Paul Scheer, Horatio Sanz and Yassir Lester lead the cast.

Trump denied House Speaker Nancy Pelosi use of a military plane for a scheduled overseas trip. GETTY IMAGES

Trump tells Pelosi her overseas trip postponed

Sen. Lindsey Graham called the spat "sophomoric."

President Donald Trump on Thursday stopped House of Representatives Speaker Nancy Pelosi from using a military plane for an overseas trip, in a tit for tat after the Democratic leader's suggestion he postpone the State of the Union address during the partial government shutdown.

Republican Trump told Pelosi in a letter that her trip to Belgium, Egypt and Afghanistan, which he derided as a "public relations event," would be postponed, citing the shutdown that has entered its 27th day.

It was not clear what trip Trump was referring to. Lawmakers often do not publicize foreign trips before they occur for security reasons, particularly when the trips involve a war zone as in this case.

"Due to the shutdown, I am sorry to inform you that your trip to Brussels, Egypt and Afghanistan has been postponed," Trump's letter said.

Trump told Pelosi she could make the trip by flying commercial.

The U.S. House Speaker normally uses a military plane for overseas travel and it was on that basis that Trump, as commander in chief, appeared to be acting.

"He postponed her ability to use military air," which must be approved by the Department of Defense, said White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders.

On Wednesday, Pelosi had written to Trump suggesting he postpone his Jan. 29 State of the Union address because of security concerns during the shutdown.

The government has been partially shut since Dec. 22, in a standoff triggered by Trump's demand for $5.7 billion to fund a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border, which Democrats oppose.

Presidents traditionally deliver the nationally televised annual address, which lays out the administration's goals for the year, in the House of Representatives chamber before a joint session of Congress and the majority of the Cabinet.

Pelosi said earlier on Thursday that she had not received a response from the White House, and Trump did not respond to the suggestion in the letter.

Trump's action drew criticism from one of his Republican allies in the Senate.

"One sophomoric response does not deserve another," Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham wrote on Twitter. He criticized Pelosi's move on the State of the Union as "blatantly political" but said, "President Trump denying Speaker Pelosi military travel to visit our troops in Afghanistan, our allies in Egypt and NATO is also inappropriate." US separated 'thousands' more immigrant kids than known: Watchdog

GETTY IMAGES

The U.S. government may have separated "thousands" more immigrant children from their parents than previously known but inadequate record-keeping means the exact number is still unclear, an internal watchdog said on Thursday.

The Office of Inspector General at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) said the agency had identified many more children in addition to the 2,737 included as part of a class-action lawsuit challenging family separations brought by the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) last year.

The administration of President Donald Trump implemented a "zero tolerance" policy to criminally prosecute and jail all illegal border crossers, even those traveling with their children, leading to a wave of separations last year. The policy sparked outrage when it became public, and the backlash led Trump to sign an executive order reversing course on June 20, 2018.

But the auditor said in a report that prior to the officially announced "zero tolerance" policy, the government began ramping up separations in 2017 for other reasons related to a child's safety and well-being, including separating parents with criminal records or lack of proper documents.

The report also said more than 100 minors, including more than two dozen under five years old, were separated after the president's executive order.

Katie Waldman, a spokeswoman for U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS), said the practice of separating apprehended minors from adults to protect the interests of the children has been standard practice "for more than a decade."

Reuters reported in June that from October 2016 through February 2018, before the official "zero tolerance" policy was in place, nearly 1,800 immigrant families were separated at the U.S.-Mexico border. REUTERS

DA says pipeline worker cyberbullied resident

A Mariner East pipeline welder said they hope a local resident's "house burns," DA says.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Part of the Mariner East II Pipeline in Delaware County. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

As the Mariner East pipeline is under criminal investigation by Chester County DA Tom Hogan, criticism of the pipeline on social media from citizens has yielded threats and criticism from union workers on the pipeline.

Hogan released a screenshot of threatening messages posted by a worker he identified as a welder with Pipeliners Union Local 798, based in Oklahoma, and condemned the messages, saying he had spoken to union officials to seek disciplinary actions.

"If my weld was bad I hope it's in your backyard so I can watch your house burn down on the news," the unidentified welder wrote in an Instagram comment to a Chesco resident, captured in a screenshot shared by Hogan. "Thanks for the 100,000.00 summer."

The worker also called the Chesco resident a "r—d" and "k--t," a misspelling of a vulgar insult, after she raised concerns about the safety of the Mariner East pipelines.

"Calling a woman that particular word is incredibly offensive, even if you spell it incorrectly," Hogan said in a statement. "Calling anybody the 'R' word is unacceptable. We will not allow our citizens to be bullied."

Hogan urged any other Chesco residents who are bullied or threatened by pipeline workers to contact his office or notify local authorities. His office also contacted Local 798 leadership in Oklahoma and Texas, who he said "agreed that the comments were totally inappropriate."

The incident reflects growing tensions around Hogan's investigation into Mariner East's pipelines, which is being conducted by special prosecutor Seth Weber, a former federal prosecutor.

The investigation was kicked off in December 2018 in part due to concerns of the pipelines causing sinkholes and fouling well water, along with other public safety hazards, which Hogan said may lead to charges of "causing a catastrophe."

Energy Transfer LP, which owns and operates the pipeline along with Sunoco Logistics Partners and related corporate entities, previously stated it they "vehemently deny any such wrongdoing and take issue with the many factual inaccuracies contained in the district attorney's press release."

But Hogan said the pipelines "rip through the heart of Chester County, citing sinkholes that formed in backyards of West Whiteland Township homes, contaminated well-water in Chester County, and the September 2018 pipeline explosion that burned down a home in Beaver County.

"We expected the state regulators and the governor to step in and assure the safety of Pennsylvanians," Hogan previously said. "They have not." (The Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection extensively reviewed the project before granting permits to the pipeline.)

Facebook blocks accounts linked to Russian state-owned Sputnik

Facebook Inc. said on Thursday it had removed hundreds of Russia-initiated accounts, which it judged to be involved in coordinated inauthentic behavior on its platforms, including some linked to state-owned news agency Sputnik.

In a separate statement, Sputnik attacked the social network for a decision it said was political and amounted to censorship of seven Facebook pages belonging to its news hubs in neighboring countries.

Facebook's head of cybersecurity policy, Nathaniel Gleicher, said in a blog post it had unearthed two separate operations which originated in Russia, with one active in multiple countries across eastern Europe and the other specific to Ukraine.

The social media company said it had taken down about 364 Facebook pages and accounts operating in Baltic Sea states, Central Asia, the Caucasus, and parts of Europe, and that the pages were linked to employees of Sputnik.

GETTY IMAGES

"Despite their misrepresentations of their identities, we found that these pages and accounts were linked to employees of Sputnik," Gleicher wrote.

"Some of the pages frequently posted about topics like anti-NATO sentiment, protest movements and anti-corruption."

Facebook has been under fire for the last two years for its self-admitted sluggishness in developing tools to combat extremist content and propaganda operations.

It and other social media companies have targeted foreign interference on their platforms after criticism that they did not do enough to detect, halt and disclose Russian efforts to influence the outcome of the 2016 U.S. presidential race.

Iran and Russia have both denied allegations that they used social media platforms to launch disinformation campaigns, but Facebook and Twitter took down millions of posts and shuttered accounts linked to influence operations in the run-up to mid-term elections last November.

Facebook also said that based on a tip from U.S. law enforcement, it had separately removed 107 pages, groups and accounts and 41 Instagram accounts that originated in Russia and operated in Ukraine. REUTERS

LOS ANGELES RAMS AT NEW ORLEANS SAINTS (-3.5)

Moneyline: Rams +165, Saints -185
Betting total: 56.5 points
Time (Eastern), TV: 3:05 p.m., FOX

The Los Angeles Rams and New Orleans Saints, both 13-3 in the regular season, seemed destined to meet in the NFC Championship game. They were given stiff tests in the Divisional Round by the Cowboys and Eagles, respectively, but each club survived. Given their dominance at home this season and their 10-point victory over L.A. in the Superdome in Week 9, it's no surprise that New Orleans is favored by more than a field goal here. However, an upset could be in the making.

Todd Gurley and C.J. Anderson ran wild on Dallas at the L.A. Coliseum last week, as each man recorded a 100-yard rushing game. Like the Cowboys, the Saints' calling card on defense is their run stopping (second in the league at 78.4 yards allowed per contest). If the Rams can get their run game going as they did a week ago, they'll be in good shape in the NFC Championship Game.

The Saints' offense, meanwhile, has cooled considerably in recent weeks. Drew Brees and company have topped 20 points just twice in their last five games (excluding Week 17, when Brees sat out). That's led to a 1-4 record against the spread in that span. Michael Thomas is fresh off a 12-catch, 171-yard effort against the Eagles, and he did register 12 catches for 211 yards against L.A. in Week 9, but Aqib Talib wasn't active then. His presence in the secondary on Sunday could stymie the Saints' aerial attack to some extent. The Rams' defense on the road was certainly better than it was at home, as they allowed just 19.9 points per contest in away games (6th in the league) compared to 23.9 points per game overall (20th).

Rams vs. Saints has the makings of a high-scoring but closely-contested tilt. Bettors would be wise to grab the points with L.A. and give a good look at the Over despite the high total.

Prediction: Rams win, 34-31
The play: Rams +3.5 and Rams vs. Saints Over 56.5 points Parlay (+264)

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS AT KANSAS CITY CHIEFS (-3)

Moneyline: Patriots +130, Chiefs -150
Betting total: 55 points
Time (Eastern), TV: 6:40 p.m., CBS

A frigid Arrowhead Stadium will be the site of Sunday's AFC Championship Game between the New England Patriots and the Kansas City Chiefs. Temperatures are expected to be in the 20s, with the wind chill only serving to amplify the harsh conditions. Despite their 43-40 loss to New England back in Week 6, Kansas City is listed as the betting favorite. The total has dropped two points from the original mark of 57.

The most concrete trend heading into this matchup is the Patriots' struggles on the road. For the first time since 2009, Tom Brady and company posted a losing road record (3-5 straight-up and against the spread) in the regular season. Their strengths at home turned into weaknesses in away games; New England's league-leading plus-15.9 point differential at home contrasts starkly with its minus-2.4 point differential in away contests. The Pats didn't travel all that well this year either, allowing an average of over three additional points per tilt compared to their overall number.

Meanwhile, in spite of all the criticism of the Chiefs' defense this year, they've actually been better than average at Arrowhead Stadium. Their points per game allowed mark of 17.4 was the third-best in the NFL. Kansas City's stoppers thoroughly dominated Andrew Luck and the Colts last Saturday, surrendering just one offensive touchdown in a 31-13 shellacking.

Given the extremely cold weather, points won't be as easy to come by as they were when these clubs collided in Foxboro in Week 6. Therefore, capitalizing on prime scoring chances will be crucial. Patrick Mahomes' offense was among the best in the NFL at turning red zone trips into touchdowns, finding the end zone 72 percent of the time (second). New England's conversion percentage was just 60.9 (14th).

Kansas City's offense seems better-equipped to handle the bitter conditions thanks to Tyreek Hill. Mahomes can find "The Cheetah" in the flat and let him use his legs to beat the defense. Julian Edelman looked like he was coated in butter as he tallied 151 yards on nine receptions against the Chargers, but L.A.'s defense was probably exhausted from a grueling schedule that saw them constantly traveling. Edelman also had the benefit of a week's rest.

This seems like a very fair line for a Chiefs team that was thoroughly dominant at times at home this year. The Patriots have lost three straight road playoff games, and it looks like it will be four on Sunday night. Give the field goal with K.C., and consider betting the Under on this big number as well.

Prediction: Chiefs win, 27-21
The play: Chiefs -3 and Patriots vs. Chiefs Under 55 points Parlay (+264)

Report: Phillies looking to sign Mike Trout in 2021

The 27-year-old Trout only has two years left on his current contract with the Angels.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

GETTY IMAGES

While everybody is sitting back and awaiting the decisions from Manny Machado and Bryce Harper on where they will be playing baseball for the foreseeable future, the Philadelphia Phillies are already thinking about 2021 free agency.

You might be asking yourself, why are the Phillies concerning themselves about free agency two years away when they haven't even signed Harper or Machado yet?

According to Tom Verducci of Sports Illustrated, the Phils have enough money to sign both generational talents but would like to sign either Harper or Machado, just in case Los Angeles Angels superstar outfielder Mike Trout becomes a free agent.

Verducci also mentioned that Philly's dream outfield scenario for the 2021 season would be Harper, Trout and Andrew McCutchen.

Nevertheless, it does not come as a surprise to see the Phillies interested in another generational talent. Owner John Middleton mentioned earlier this offseason how the team will have "stupid money" to spend in free agency.

If they were to sign Harper, for example, it would leave them the opportunity to spend more "stupid money" on Trout, who grew up Millville, New Jersey, and still lives there.

Outside of the local connection, Trout only has two years left on his contract with the Angels.

Could the Eagles sign Le'Veon Bell in free agency?

While some of the focus has shifted to the sudden deterioration of Antonio Brown's relationship with the Pittsburgh Steelers — which will most likely end up in a trade — his former teammate and running back Le'Veon Bell continues to be top billing on the NFL's free agent list.

After sitting out the 2018 season due to contract disputes, Bell will become an unrestricted free agent this winter and will be able to sign with a new team on March 14. Missing the entire year was the only way Bell could freely move elsewhere, as the Steelers extended the franchise tag for a second straight season on the 26-year-old. He had until Nov. 13 to accept the deal and report to team facilities but opted not to, which made him ineligible for the rest of 2018.

The breakup stemmed from broken-down contract negotiations. While the Steelers offered Bell a contract worth $70 million over five years ($14 million per year), the back is looking for a deal that will pay him an average of $17 million per season.

It is a steep price to pay for any interested party, but it could very well be worth it. Bell is one of the most explosive two-way backs in football, and one of the most reliable when he's healthy.

The New York Jets have long been linked with Bell, as soon as there was evidence of unrest between the All-Pro and the Steelers.

While Bell initially played off the idea of joining the Jets back in February, Gang Green has become the frontrunner for his services, per multiple reports. He has even come around on the notion that he could be the No. 1 back to support second-year quarterback Sam Darnold.

New York wouldn't have any issues meeting his salary expectations, either, as they are projected to have over $100 million of cap space to play with this offseason.

The Jets could see some competition in the form of the Philadelphia Eagles, who will be in the running-back market this winter.

General manager Howie Roseman and head coach Doug Pederson basically came out on Tuesday and said their backfield needs to improve, according to Zack Rosenblatt of NJ.com.

Aries Share your feelings and please a loved one. Your efforts won't go unnoticed, and the results will bring you closer to a personal goal you've been working toward.

Taurus If you want to avoid interference, you are best off not letting anyone know what you are up to. Don't trust someone to be honest regarding money matters.

Gemini If you want to make a change, do so quietly. The less you let others know about what you are doing, the easier it will be to get things done without someone meddling.

Cancer Update important documents and get your legal and financial papers in order. An unusual offer will cause uncertainty. Don't take a risk.

Leo A makeover on the outside and soul-searching on the inside will help you confront any problems that are standing in your way. Change begins within. Romance is highlighted.

Virgo Step outside your comfort zone and try something new. Don't let an unfortunate personal matter stand between you and something you want to do. A social event will lift your spirits.

Libra Personal matters can be dealt with if you are patient, know what you want and are willing to compromise. Use your charm and imagination to get your way.

Scorpio If you get together with friends or relatives, you will be privy to valuable information. Discovering things about your lineage will help point you in a new direction.

Sagittarius Express your wants and feelings, and start making plans for the future. Love, romance and changes to your living arrangements and lifestyle are favored.

Capricorn The people you deal with today will tend to exaggerate. Dig deep and find out what's true and what's false before you invest time or money in something uncertain.

Aquarius Network, engage in talks with someone close to you or consider your best option to get ahead. Love is in the stars, and romance will improve your personal life.

Pisces Keep your emotions in check or you will miss an opportunity. Volunteer your time and participate in an event geared toward helping a cause you believe in. Offering aid will soothe your soul. EUGENIA LAST
